

You dream out loud
of ever and if.

You sing
and count the cadence,
preferably from
all that lives.

You know:
the world turns, turns its
wonderful waltz.

You draw a line.

Another
and another one
under all that was.

Until you lift off the ground.

Audible,
visible
for everyone.
